Dow, Neal. Papers. Portland, Cumberland Co., Me.

Neal Dow was born in 1804 in Portland, Maine, where he eventually became a partner in his father's tanning business. After establishing himself as one of the city's leading businessmen, he entered politics and was elected mayor. During his incumbency, he conducted a vigorous campaign to restrict the sale and use of alcoholic beverages. He was instrumental in the passage of the "Maine Law," legislation designed to facilitate temperance reform. Dow became one of the nation's leading prohibitionists. He also served as a brigadier general of volunteers in the Union Army, though he was dismissed from the Society of Friends for his military involvement. After the Civil War, he resumed his crusade for temperance reform and in 1880 ran for the Presidency as the candidate of the Prohibition Party. He continued as an active reformer until his death in 1897.

In a letter of March 13, 1896, Dow cites the "Maine Law" as a "great power for good" and one of the principal reasons for this state's rapid social and economic progress.

Dowd, A.J. MSS. 1864-1865 North Carolina

The collection contains 5 Civil War letters. Dowd was a private the in North Carolina Confederate forces. The letters are typical of the semi-illiterate soldier who was more concerned with family affairs at home and what was to become of him when the war was over than he was in campaigns and strategy. Chiefly letters to Captain Down in England, from a few men in Charleston, S.C., who were evidently employed to assist in settling a dispute involving W. J. Somers's estate. Somers was Down's father-in-law and lived in the Charleston area. There is also information relating to Down's brother, who was living in South Carolina, and a letter from one of Down's nieces to her aunt in England.

Downes, Edward. Papers, 1775-1784. Queen Annes County, Maryland

Edward Downes was a planter and prominent citizen of Queen Annes County, Maryland. Since he was a vestryman of St. Paul's Parish, he probably lived within the vicinity of the church, then Old Chester Church that was located off the road between Centreville and Queenstown. He farmed, owned several plantations some of which were rented, and apparently operated a store. There are a number of references to him in Frederic Emory's Queen Anne's County, Maryland, Its Early History and Development (Baltimore, 1950). These references indicate that he was a student at Queen Annes Free School (1725); a private in the Queen Annes Company of minutemen commanded by Capt. James Kent that fought against Lord Dunmore in Virginia in 1776; vestryman of St. Paul's (1780); register of Queen Annes County School (1781); a justice of the Orphan's Court (1782); and a trustee of the poor (1794).

Ledger A, 1775-1783 (90ff.), is a fine, detailed accounting of his personal, family, and business expenses during those years. This volume is not labeled with his name, but loose sheets of accounts found within it identify it as his. One sheet is Coursey Wright's account with Edward Downes, and transactions listed in it also are entered in Coursey's account in the ledger (f. 85). Because many accounts are noted as continued in "Liber B," this volume must be Ledger A. There is no index for this ledger.

Downes' early work as a storekeeper and bookkeeper noted in entries on f. 4 suggest that he was trained as a mercantile clerk. Clerks of that period were trained in fine handwriting, and his ledger is finely written as well as being an example of careful, detailed accounts.

Farming was Downes' principal financial interest, and corn, wheat, oats, and beans were the main crops. There are also numerous entries for tobacco. The value of these crops and Downes' financial activity were especially large during the late 1770's as compared to that evident in the earlier and later years recorded in this ledger. The balance of his Farm Expenses account was £ 12,400 in 1779, a year in which his Corn, Wheat, Oats, & Beans Account totaled £ 10,993. A year later his Farm Expenses Account balanced at £ 16,851. This elevated activity is noticeable in many lesser accounts as well. Depreciation of the continental currency in these years was probably responsible for these inflated accounts. Both continental and state currency are noted. Entries for the purchase of goods from a general store pervade the accounts with many persons, a good indication that Downes operated the store.

The many interesting accounts and transactions in this ledger include: wages for working in James Anderson's store (f. 3); account with a postrider (f. 4); wages for posting Colin Campbell's account books (f. 4); plantation rental (ff. 5, 7, 19, 39); hiring of slaves

Downes, Edward

(ff. 8, 11, 45, 55, 72, 77, etc.); his father's estate (f. 8); money due for 2 months and 17 days service in the "Minute Company Acting in Virginia" commanded by Capt. James Kent in 1776 (f. 11); cash account including expenses for military and recruiting service in 1777 (ff. 13-15); expenses for prizing, cooperage, carriage, and inspection of tobacco (f. 19); Recruiting Expenses Account, 1777, including cockades, drummers, and fifes (f. 20); accounts for Capt. John Combs and Peter Freneau for recruiting and other military expenses including bounties paid to named recruits one of whom was French (ff. 21-22); example of family expenses including all sorts of goods and housewares (f. 27); use of midwife for a slave (ff. 28, 72) and account with a midwife (f. 72); hiring a military substitute (ff. 40-41, 43); salary as register of Queen Annes County School (f. 56); accounts with a wheelwright and tanner (f. 63), there being entries for various kinds of artisans scattered through the accounts; account with a shoemaker (f. 77); attendance at court as a magistrate (f. 78); expenses for making bricks and for building a house (f. 87); his accounts with the Collector of the Tax including his remuneration as a juror, magistrate, and clerk to the Commissioners of the Tax for the county (ff. 62, 75); entries for lumber scattered through the volume; etc. Additional references to some of these topics may be found by a careful scrutiny of the accounts. Accounts involving sizeable amounts of money include those for Robert Clogg, Francis Baker, Capt. William Emory, William Emory, Charles Murphey, merchant Robert Anderson, Capt. John Combs, and various members of the Downes family.

The Financial Papers, 1779-1784, contain six items, among them: one identifying Downes as the owner of property known as "Fairplay;" one with notations on the harvest of 1784 including references to slaves; and a long account for slave hire in Feb., 1781.

Downey, Samuel Smith. Papers, 1762 (1800-1900) 1965. Granville Co., N. C.

Although predominately the papers of Samuel S. Downey, the first MASS. belong to Ephraim Macquillen, a Richmond, Va. merchant. The latter part is comprised largely of the papers of Isaac H. Davis, the son-in-law of S. S. Downey.

The Macquillen MSS. are mainly letters, bills, and receipts from business firms in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston to which he sold his tobacco and flour and from which he bought supplies. Many of the letters contain reports of the state of the market for flour, tobacco, and other commodities, and of the condition of Macquillen's flour and tobacco upon their arrival in those cities. Papers concern the loss of the Fox, attempts to collect insurance on its lost cargo, and the bankruptcy of Thomas Hooper.

Macquillen's wife and children came over from Ireland in 1801. News reached N. Y. on the evening of Nov. 20, 1801, that the preliminaries of peace were signed on Oct. 1 in London between England and France. Samuel Hicks in 1803 wrote that war would be resumed between England and France and that every preparation possible was being made in London for it.

A letter from Thomas Jefferson, probably written to Dr. Benjamin Rush, gives Jefferson's views on Christianity. This is a copy.

In that portion of the collection principally S. S. Downey's correspondence are also papers of Jas. Webb Alexander, John Granville Smith, and Thos. and Jas. Downey. S. S. Downey was John G. Smith's favorite nephew and executor. John G., unmarried, left considerable property over which there was lengthy litigation, and a great many of the Downey manuscripts deal with suits by Smith's heirs.

S. S. Downey, who had moved from Mississippi, returned to Granville County, N. C., but he continued to hold his plantation in Mississippi. He owned quite a number of slaves, twenty-seven of whom he hired to work on the construction of a railroad from Natchez to Jackson. These slaves, along with those of three other Granville County men, Dr. John R. Hicks, Joseph Amis (d. Aug. 3, 1840), brothers-in-law of S. S. Downey, and Flemming Beasley, were under the supervision of Dr. Joseph Hicks, the brother of John Hicks and the agent of Downey.

The letters of Joseph Hicks to Downey and John R. Hicks contain accounts of illness and a few deaths among the slaves. After a contract between Downey and Welman and Mills expired, Hicks worked the Negroes for a short time near Jackson, then for a little while with Judge Jack of Pa. in a partnership with Major Arnold. The slaves worked on the Natchez to Jackson R. R. Hicks and Arnold became deeply indebted to Downey for the hire of his slaves; and after the death of Hicks, Downey instituted suits against the executors of Hicks and against Arnold.

Overseers were in charge of Downey's Mississippi plantation until his son James went out to take it over. Both Downey and his two sons made a number of trips to Mississippi to look after affairs before James settled there. Letters to Downey from his overseers and his lawyer, A. Burwell of Vicksburg, report on conditions on his plantation. While Downey was in Mississippi in the spring of 1837 he wrote from Jackson that his Negroes were not paying expenses. Since the legislature of Mississippi had passed a law prohibiting the bringing of Negroes into the state for hire or sale, he did not know what to do with his. Also in May, 1837, Joseph Hicks wrote that he had received orders to discontinue work on the railroad in Hinds County, Mississippi, and that the people of that county had deposed their sheriff.

Letters in 1837 and 1838 reveal some effects of the depression; one by S. S. Downey from Mississippi in 1837 comments on the scarcity of money there and about the advisability of rechartering the U. S. Bank. The next year Wm. Ford referred in one of his letters to the plight of commercial men in Richmond, and Joseph Hicks listed in one of his letters several types of Mississippi bank notes that were no good. The bank of the Natchez R. R. Co. became insolvent, and S. S. Downey instituted a suit against it to collect the money due him. According to J. F. H. Claiborne in his life of John A. Quitman, the Legislature of Mississippi "conferred banking privileges on the Natchez and other railway companies, most of which, losing sight of the design of their charters, became monstrous swindling concerns, and robbed whenever they had the opportunity."

S. S. Downey sent his tobacco produced in Granville County by wagon to merchants in Petersburg, where it was reshipped to Wm. Ford in Richmond. Letters from Ford and factors in Petersburg relate to the marketing of Downey's tobacco and to goods which they purchased for him. In 1848 Downey corresponded with merchants in Charleston, S. C., about selling manufactured tobacco in that city.

S. S. Downey married at least twice. The first of these two wives was named Jane, and she died at the age of thirty-six after bearing him two sons, James W. and John Alexander, and a daughter, Jane E. S. The other wife, whom he also survived, was Sally Smith, daughter of Alexander Smith. Their only child was Ann. Both of his sons attended the Univ. of N. C., and his daughter Ann went to Salem Female Academy. As already stated, James and John both made trips to their father's plantation in Mississippi before James finally settled there.

In 1845, John was in the Wisconsin Territory. By 1862 he had moved to Hardeman County, Tenn., but he also owned property in Floyd County, Ga. which was supervised by Lewis D. Burwell. After the retreat of the Confederates from Corinth, John described their march in a letter in which he complained of the burning and confiscation of property and the tracking down of Union men by Secessionists. Around this time Lewis Burwell wrote him about the Confederate Army's consumption of food, corn, etc. as it passed from Tupelo through Rome to Chattanooga.

In Feb., 1863, John Downey became disillusioned and wrote from Homer, Claiborne Parish, Louisiana, to Burwell depicting the trials of Federal rule in Tennessee, his flight to Texas, and the sale there of his slaves who had not deserted to the Federals. In 1884 he was still in Galveston, Texas, supporting Cleveland in the presidential race.

Ann Downey married Isaac H. Davis, a tobacco and cotton farmer who sold his crops through commission merchants in Petersburg and Norfolk and through Cooper, Blackwell, and Co. and Reams's warehouse in Durham.

Jane Downey drops out of the picture before her father's death. There is a statement of the division of the slaves of the late S. S. Downey in Hinds County, Mississippi, among his sons and his daughter Ann. In writing to Ann about buying her share of the Negroes, James speaks of the sadness among them over the prospect of being separated.

The collection also contains land deeds and other legal papers of Granville County; deeds for slaves purchased; brief diary of a boat trip made by John G. Smith in 1827 from Nashville to New Orleans and back; papers concerned with the estate of Alexander Smith; will of John G. Smith of Granville County and papers concerning the settling of his estate; will of Jas. Downey; broadsides relating to the Shiloh Sabbath School; temperance; Caldwell Institute at Greensboro, N. Democratic State Executive Committee (1888); handbill entitled Our Living and Our Dead; fire insurance policies with the Liverpool and London and Glove Insurance Co., the Imperial Fire Insurance Co. of London, the N. C. Mutual Home Insurance Co., and Old North State Insurance Co.; shorthand book and pamphlets; New Orleans Price-Current, Commercial Intelligencer and Merchants' Transcript, Oct. 5, 1850; contract

Wade of Hinds County, Mississippi, providing that the latter would take charge of Downey's plantation and slaves; letters relative to the Southern Temperance Convention to be held in Fayetteville, N. C. in Nov., 1835; the feeding of Downey's mares by John Randolph of Roanoke; the recommendation made to Downey that he return Abolition papers to their editor to keep down suspicion; the N. C. Mutual Insurance Co.; and the merits of Heebner's improved horse mowers and threshing machines; contract for hiring the slaves of Downey to work on the Natchez 'to Jackson R. R.; resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Raleigh and Gaston R. R.; papers pertaining to the suits in which Downey was involved, some of those suits being: Heirs of John G. Smith vs. Downey, Downey vs. Arnold of Pittsburg, Pa. who formed a partnership with Hicks to work Downey's slaves on the Natchez to Jackson R. R., Downey vs. the Natchez R. R. Co., and Downey vs. Benj. J. Hicks, executor, and Mary Hicks, executrix, of Joseph T. Hicks.

Some other subjects treated in this collection are: A project for clearing the Roanoke River; incorrigibility of slaves; Methodists and Episcopalians in Jackson County, Tenn.; a camp meeting in Kentucky; religious matters at Union Theological Seminary, Prince Edward County, Va. as viewed by a student; runaway slaves; purchase of slaves for gold mining in Granville County; victory of the Whigs in that county; depredations of Confederates.

The two bound vols. are: A ledger of John G. Smith of Granville Co., 1798-1803 - included in it is a daybook (1887-1901) of Ann A. Davis, and ledger of S. S. Downey, 1828-1874.

Samuel S. Downey was the son of James and Elizabeth (Smith) Downey. His grandfather, Samuel Smith, migrated from Essex County, Va., in the early 1760's to occupy a grant of land from the Earl of Granville in Granville County, N. C. James Downey, father of Samuel S., was born in Essex County, Va.

Samuel S. Downey married Jane Harrison in 1812. She died in 1827, having borne him three children: John Alexander (A. B., U. N. C., 1836, and M. D. from U. of Pa. Medical School, 1839); James Webb (A. B., U. N. C., 1843); and Jane E. S. (in school in Chapel Hill in 1843). S. S. Downey married Sarah (Sally) Pomfret Smith (1814-1831), his first cousin, in 1829. She bore him one daughter; Anne (1830-1914).

Downey served as deputy sheriff in 1812, became justice of the peace, and was postmaster of "Abram's Plains" from 1841 until at least 1847. He died in 1851. His name was given as a "reference" in an advertisement of the Shiloh Classical School in The Raleigh Register, July 6, 1839.

John R. Hicks received his medical degree from the U. of Pa. Medical School in 1825.

Benjamin Hicks received his medical degree from U. of Pa. in 1834.

(See A. J. Webb, Our Webb Kin in Dixie, Oxford, N. C.).

The following death notices appear in The Raleigh Register and North Carolina State

Gazette, 1846-1855: Samuel Smith Downey died May 17, 1851; Jane S. Downey died in July, 1846; and James Downey died in September, 1846.

GUIDE

Daybooks and Ledgers, 1853-1903

Port Republic, Rockingham Co., Va.

8-8-63 7 vols.

(See also bound vol. cards)

Downs, William S. Daybooks and Ledgers, 1853-1903. Port Republic, Rockingham Co., Va.

The identification of these volumes with William S. Downs depends primarily on the appearance of his name in a daybook and a ledger and on the fact that accounts can be traced from these books to the other daybooks and ledgers. On page iii of the daybook for 1866-1869 Downs name appears. The ledger for 1856-1903 has both his name and the place name of Port Republic, Virginia. William S. Downs was still alive as late as March 21, 1889, for a letter to him on that date was found inside one of the volumes; it is filed in an envelope on the inside back flyleaf of the ledger for 1856-1903. Some later letters are addressed to W. J. Downs, so the firm may have changed proprietorship sometime in the 1890's.

Downs operated a tannery and saddlery according to the entries in his account books. An advertisement for his business is in the Rockingham Register, October 14, 1869, p. 4, col. 5. He advertises the sale of kips, calf skins, and sole, upper, harness, and bridle leather. The advertisement also quotes prices that Downs will pay for certain quantities of green hides, veal skins, sheep skins, and horse hides.

The ledgers overlap chronologically. However, it is possible to determine their order of succession, because an account occasionally begins or ends with a reference that it either continues from or will be continued in another volume. By this means the ledgers have been given numbers in addition to their dates. The daybooks are orderly. The numbers beside the entries refer to page numbers in one of the ledgers. However, the daybook for 1862-1865 occupies only the last half of its volume. The first half is a daybook and inventory for the mercantile firm of Benjamin Franklin Kemper and Brothers of Port Republic in 1854.

Ledger III includes some unidentified mercantile accounts of 1840-1842. These early accounts are omitted in the dating of the ledger because they seem unrelated to Downs.

Individual identification cards for each volume follow this sketch of the collection.

Ledger IV is encased with a leather cover, perhaps one made at Downs' tannery.

The entries in the account for John Dundore in the Downs Ledger I correlate with entries in the John Dundore Daybook, 1852-1858. Dundore cites his transactions with the other firm sometimes as William Downs and sometimes as Pifer and Downs. Apparently Downs had a partner named Pifer sometime during the 1850's.

Drake, Daniel. Papers, 1820-1849. Cincinnati, Ohio. 14 items. Sketch.

Daniel Drake (1785-1852), American physician, professor, and voluminous writer helped organize in 1818-19 the Cincinnati College, the Medical College of Ohio, and the Commercial Hospital (later the U. S. Marine Hospital). In these years he was the partner of Dr. Coleman Rogers, whose letter to Drake on Jan. 5, 1820, indicates that the two men could not agree. Rogers was once president of the Medical College of Ohio and professor of surgery. When the college opened in 1821-22, Drake had a misunderstanding with colleagues and was expelled from the faculty. At this time Drake writes to Philadelphia to recommend Robert Best (1790-1830), English chemist and natural philosopher, who was Rev. Elijah Slack's assistant in 1821-22 in the Medical College of Ohio. Both Best and Drake went to Transylvania College in 1823. In 1842, while professor of clinical medicine and pathological anatomy at the University of Louisville, Drake writes to Gov. Robert Perkins Letcher of Ky. to urge the reappointment of Bishop Benjamin Bosworth Smith as superintendent of public instruct ion. Notes to a patient, Mrs. Davis, and to Gen. Zachary Taylor were written in 1843. While professor of the practice of medicine at Louis-ville, Dr. Drake writes in 1846 to Josiah C. Drake, his grandson in St. Louis, on family affairs.

Drayton, William. Letters, 1779-1833. Charleston, South Carolina

William Drayton was born in St. Augustine, Fla., Dec. 30, 1776, and died in Philadelphia, May 24, 1846. His mother died shortly after his birth and he was brought up as a foster brother of Robert James Turnbull, the champion of Nullification. He was educated in England, and returned home at his father's death and became an assistant to his brother, Jacob Drayton, then clerk of the court of general sessions in Charleston. He was admitted to the bar in 1797, and before 1812 had an extensive practice. He had become a lieutenant in the "ancient battalion of artillery" in 1801, and at the beginning of the War of 1812, though as an ardent Federalist he had opposed it, he offered his services to the government, gave up his law practice, and was commissioned lieutenant colonel of the 10th U.S. Infantry. Shortly before the close of the war, he was associated with Scott and Macomb in the preparation of a system of infantry tactics which was afterwards adopted by the War Department. From 1819-1824 he was recorder of

Drayton, William

Sketch (3) Charleston and was then elected to Congress as a Union Democrat to fill the vacancy of Joel R. Poinsett, then minister to Mexico. He served from 1825 to 1833 and in 1830, though hostile to tariff, opposed nullification. He was a friend of President Jackson, and was offered the portfolio of war after Eaton's resignation, and also the English Mission, both of which he declined. After his congressional career he retired to Philadelphia, partly influenced by the political diffierences resulting from his course in the nullification contest. In 1839-40 he was Nicholas Biddle's successor as president of the U.S.Bank, and tried to revive it, but retired as soon as he had placed the remaining assets of the bank in the hands of the assignees, which he had decided was the only honest course, though it was unpopular.

The collection contains the routine political correspondence of William Drayton. They are recommendations to various cabinet members and government officials for appointment of one sort or another. The letters are of little value, except that they are illustrative of the prosaic, routine correspondence of a man in public life. The two pieces added refer to the estate of John Drayton, probably a great uncle of William Drayton.

Three of the correspondents in this collection were members of the Drenan family and probably were brothers. They are Ryland F., John S., and J. Frank Drenan. Born in 1847, Ryland moved to Woodbury, Washington County, Vermont, in 1884. He became a farmer and the proprietor of the Woodbury Center Hotel there and represented Woodbury in the state legislature in 1886. John S., also from Woodbury, enlisted in the 11th Regiment of the Vermont Volunteers as a private in 1862 and by the next year had been promoted to the rank of second lieutenant. During the war he was taken prisoner, but was released and honorably discharged in 1865. The third member of the family, J. Frank Drenan, was a corporal in the 1st Vermont Artillery during the Civil War.

The letters in the Drenan Family Papers mainly were written by Union soldiers from Vermont who were stationed in Washington, D. C.,

Virginia, and Maryland. The letters other than those written by the Drenan brothers were written by friends and relatives of the Drenans.

There is some mention of U. S. Army hospitals during the Civil War, particularly the General Hospitals at Fort Schuyler and Harpers Ferry. The conditions were evidently extremely crowded, and many men died there. A letter dated August 12, 1862 noted the Battle at Culpepper Court House. Several of the correspondents mentioned the unhappiness of war, such as friends being killed, wounded, or taken prisoner.

Reverend Charles Dresser was the minister of Antrim Parish in Halifax Co., Va., from 1828 to 1838. He was evidently a very zealous worker, carrying on extensive negotiations with the Virginia Bible Society and the American Tract Society, helping to circulate the first issues of the Southern Churchman and developing the largest congregation in the diocese. He is also responsible for the preservation of the early history of Antrim Parish, in a letter written in 1830 to Drewry, Amos S., and Company. Cashbooks, 1854-1857; Ledgers, 1854-1861. Lawrenceville, Brunswick County, Va.

These cashbook-ledgers belonged to Amos S. Drewry and Company of Lawrenceville, Virginia. According to the accounts, Drewry operated an inn and tavern. The two volumes belong together because continuing accounts can be traced from the earlier into the later volume. The name and address of the company are supplied by business notes and receipts from the Edward Brodnax and David S. Hicks Papers. David Hicks, a lawyer, probably collected debts for Drewry or his estate, for Hick's signature appears with the settlement of a number of accounts in the later volume.

Drewry's accounts essentially cease in 1857, but settlements of outstanding debts extend the dating a few years later. A cashbook-ledger of Nicholson and Company begins in 1858 and contains accounts that are similar to Drewry's. Further, an item entitled, "A list of debt Collected By T. J. Nicholson for A. S. Drewry and Co.," has several entries that relate to accounts in Drewry's cashbook-ledger for 1856-1861. Nicholson seems to have taken over the Drewry business. This list was found within the Nicholson volume and is filed in an envelope on its inside back cover.

Several promissory notes that show the name and location of the company were removed from the Hicks Papers and are filed in an envelope on the inside back cover of Drewry's volume for 1856-1861. The starred items on the Riddick and Marks notes can be found entered in the Riddick account and the cashbook respectively.

The cashbook is at the end of the volume.

The cash accounts are continuous between the two volumes, but the ledger accounts overlap in dating, often because of settlements of debts in later years. The accounts are primarily for 1854-1857.

Dromgoole, George Coke and Richard B. Robinson.
Papers.
Lawrenceville, Brunswick Co.,
Va.

Droomgoole was a large planter and politician of local prominence. He practiced law, served in both houses of the State legislature, and was a delegate to the Va. Convention of 1829 prior to his service in Congress, 1835-1841 and 1843-1847.

The correspondence covers family, business, and political matters, and shows Dromgoole to have been a large planter. A considerable portion of the letters refers to management of the plantation and slaves.

1910 items and 2 bound vols. added 8-9-50. These papers are largely the legal and business papers of Edward Dromgoole, son and one of the administrators of the estate of Geo. C. Dromgoole and Richard B. Robinson; receipts for tobacco tithe in 1864 and other taxes in kind; plantation records; contract with a freedman; receipts from 9-1-51--6 items added. These include two small account books (1816-17) dealing with the estate of Thomas Dromgoole.

2-11-55 — 1854 items added. Correspondence and papers of Edward Dromgoole, prominent planter of Brunswick Co., Va., during the Dromgoole, George C. and Richard B. Robinson latter half of the nineteenth century, and sometime lawyer at South Gaston, N.C. The letters and papers give an excellent account of plantation life and management just previous to and following the Civil War in Va., dealing mainly with such matters as the settlement of accounts and notes, the sale of slaves and cotton, the production of such crops as cotton, corn, and tobacco, land tenure, land drainage, labor agreements, etc. A large number of the letters to Dromgoole following the Civil War are from his land tenants, which Dromgoole, George C. and Richard B. Robinson discuss in great detail the problems of plantation management. A few plantation account sheets and Dromgoole's daybook showing plantation expenses (1892-93) are included.

A few letters from M. M. Harrison, a student at Virginia Military Institute during the 1870's, to Dromgoole, his guardian, give much information on V. M. I. and some account of the death and funeral of Commodore Matthew Fontaine Maury, a professor at the Institute, in 1873.

Also included in the collection are bonds

Dromgoole, George C. and Richard B. Robinson and obligations; land deeds; Justice of the Peace, County, and Circuit Court minutes, orders, summonses, warrants, and depositions of Brunswick County; articles of agreement for land tenure and labor on Dromgoole's plantations; various obituaries; land plats; the will of James Ledbetter of Brunswick County (Dec. 1, 1820); advertisements; numerous bills and receipts; promissory notes; and a memorandum book.

An item of especial interest in the collection is a copy of the petition for exemption promgoole, George C. and Richard B. Robinson from Confederate military service made by Dromgoole in 1864, in which he discusses the size and importance of the plantation under his management, both those of his own and of his wards.

3 items and 1 vol. added, 6-21-62: Two personal letters and an undated fragment of another and a daybook. The daybook runs from 1847 to 1869 and includes records for the hiring of slaves and freedmen.

4 items and 1 vol. added, 6-1-68: A promissory note, three letters, and a small volume.

The promissory note concerns the estate of Edward Dromgoole (Nov. 5, 1840).

Two of the letters pertain to business affairs (Nov. 7, 1848 and Feb. 15, 1861), while the third letter contains references to Brigham Young and mining in Utah. This last item has been partially destroyed, making it difficult to understand these references.

The volume includes a list of the birth dates and other data concerning slaves. It appears to have been kept by various members of the Robinson family during the years 1843-1865.

litem added, 7-5-68: A promissory note signed by Richard B. Robinson for the payment of fees for the stud service of a stallion

(Aug. 7, 1862).

2 items added, 1-24-72: A letter of January 5, 1972, from Mr. and Mrs. Dromgoole Heath to relatives, giving a brief summary of the genealogical research work they have done. There is also a notebook entitled "Canaan," which was the home of Edward Dromgoole. It includes pictures and a description of the house, and information on Edward Dromgoole and his children.

1 volume added, 8-5-74: "Dromgoole Memorial Service," a description of a service held on April 28, 1974, at the Dromgoole family cemetery in Brunswick Co., Va. This volume was prepared by Mr. and Mrs. V. Dromgoole Heath and

There are letters from Wm. O. Rahn, a very religious soldier, to his wife in which he writes of desertion & the wickedness of the soldiers.

Du Bois, E. (2)

A letter of July 28, 1866 reports cholera in Savannah. There are letters from merchants in N.Y. and cotton factors & commission merchants in Charleston. A letter of Sept. 20, 1870 speaks of the prosperity of Atlanta & one in Apr.1871 tells of preparations there for the Exposition.

Eugene wrote home rather often. He advised regarding Paul's education, commented on his work, his disillusionment as a young lawyer, & politics & told of his intention to marry Elizabeth A. Bender in Oct. 1891. In 1889 the firm of Countryman & Du Bois had instituted a suit against the executors & trustees of the estate of Samuel J.

Du Bois, E. (3)

Tilden, which suit was still in the courts in 1896. Eugene's comments on politics include a report of the number of delegates attending the Prohibition state convention in 1889, Cleveland's strength in N.Y. in 1890, and his preference for McKinley in 1900.

There is a letter (Apr. 27, 1890) from Wm. Johnston of Charlotte, N.C. He owned land near Bluffton. A letter from L. Fowler of Mt. Kisco, N.Y. states that the attendance by some Northern ladies of a W.C.T.U. convention in Atlanta did much to "wash out the bloody shirt." A lynching & murders in Fort White, Fla. are mentioned in a letter of Nov. 30, 1893. On Nov. 14, 1894 Geo. Cary Eggleston wrote to Du Bois inquiring as to conditions for fishing at Bluffton.

By 1900 Du Bois was operating a store. His son Paul was then working in New Hampshire.

Papers, 1760-1850

1-27-44 (See also bound vol. cards) Dubreuil, Joseph Villars. Papers. Tchoupetoulas, Orleans Parish, La. and French West Indies

Joseph Dubreuil de Villars, Chevalier de St. Louis, occupied many important positions both in Louisiana and the French Indies. He was born in Louisiana in 1744, and was sent to France to be educated. While a pupil in the royal corps of artillery in 1764, he was commissioned as a second lieutenant by Louis XV in a company of cannoneers and bombardiers at Boullive-Bonneveaux in Guadaloupe. In the course of thirty years' service he achieved the rank of lieutenant colonel of colonial troops stationed at Leogane in Santo Domingo. During the latter years of this period Villars as an adherent of the fallen house of Bourbon, was engaged in preserving order in this disturbed island and was forcibly expelled from that place by two agents of the French Republic in 1792 or 1793.

The vessel on which he was sailing for Philadelphia was taken by an English privateer and Villars was landed in Kingston, Jamaica. From there he helped with the organization of a group of French Royalists whose object was to restore order in Santo Domingo. There are no records of the actual attempts that were made, but it appears that they were successful in so far as to give the English troops temporary control of French Santo Domingo. Later Chevalier de Villars acted as a member of the Privy Council of the English government at Port-au-Prince.

Dubreuil departed with them and took up his residence in Louisiana where he had relatives. He lived there until his death about 1808 or 1809.

He was succeeded by a long line of Villars and Dubreuils whose exact relationships are difficult to trace because of the apparent inconsistent use of the two names. The family seems always to have been of considerable means, most of its members being cane and cotton planters. Members of the family married into the

Trudeau, Lassise, and Gaston families. (For more detailed biographical information see typed sheet "Dubreuil de Villars family" placed at the beginning of the collection.)

The manuscript material includes one sheet of genealogical information on the Villars family (dated 1768) and a sketch of the Trudeau and Lassise families (undated).

There are three letters from the early years of the first Villars' life. One concerns a claim which he held against the estate of one Brosset and Toutant-Beauregard. The other two concern his military rank and transfer to Santo Domingo.

One letter to Villars in Santo Domingo is interesting for its remark that conditions in Santo Domingo were preferable to those in Europe where war and anarchy ruled. Also contains family news. There are also several family letters of the Villars in the set.

Various receipts and business letters prior to 1798 indicate that Villars was handling in Santo Domingo the business affairs of the Viscount de Kercado (London) and of a M. de la Rue. Papers include property lists and frequent references to the sale of sugar. See also account book of Viscount de Kercado, placed at end of collection.

Several pieces bear on the business transactions of the Villars family in Louisiana. There are a number of letters concerning the settlement of the Trudeau estate, and a deed to land signed Mar. 16, 1857, by Louis Joseph Didier Villars.

Perhaps the most valuable portion of the collection is a number of papers of a public or political nature. These include a letter, June 2, 1804, about Louisiana's relations with the Federal government, including a bitter attack on C. C. Claiborne; a census of the Territory of Orleans for 1806; reports on the status of the Louisiana Treasury covering the years 1806-1809; a letter (Jan. 13, 1813) from Thomas Butler to Rene Trudeau concerning a slave uprising; petition of the State of Louisiana to the Congress of the U. S. protesting the military activities of General Wilkinson and his attempts to have the writ of Habeas Corpus suspended (n.d.); a copy of a speech made in the legislature on the low state of morals in Louisiana (n. d.); memoranda for proposed changes in civil law (n. d.); a petition to the legislature from Attakapas Co. about land titles and registration, use of cypress groves, and proposed legislative action on several matters (n. d.); proposed acts for the compensation of members of the legislative councils (n. d.); "Notes from the Committee of Instructions of the Territorial Assembly" (n. d.); and recommendations to the City Council of New Orleans.

Miscellaneous material in the collection includes notes on the English police system; notes on "Principles of conduct for married people"; a patriotic song; an historical sketch of Louis XV and Louis XVI; one copybook of maxims on legislation and politics with notes on the commercial code; one commonplace book containing poems, a play, story, and a song. There is also one bound volume containing bits of French verse.

A number of the longer papers in this set have typed translations.

DUC, H. A. Letters & Papers 1840-1909 Charleston, S. C.

H. A. Duc was a Charleston tin and sheet iron merchant. He bought most of his supplies from Phelps, Dodge & Co. of New York and their bills and invoices, of which there are a number in this collection, are good indices to prices of these commodities in the 1840's and 1850's.

Duc had several sons among whom were H. A. ("Archie") Duc, Jr., Edward, Charles, and Laurence. (It is rather difficult to tell from the letters whether some of these were sons or sons-in-law). Archie seems to have been the only he was taken into partnership and the firm called H. A. Ouc and Son. Two letters from Archie in October of 1870 when he was in New York observing the latest types of tin-working machinery reveal his enthusiasm for his profession.

This interest in metal work and mechanics seems to have continued throughout his lifetime, for in 1906 (Mar. & Apr.) he was granted patents for a "Marine Engine" and an "Elastic Fluid Engine." Unfortunately no description of these inventors is included in the collection.

DUC -3-

The bulk of the collection consists of letters from the various other Ducs, usually concerned only with family matters. One, however, (July 26, 1874) from a grandson named Henry gives a good description of the Nebraska settlers' sod houses. Another (May 20, 1878) from a friend of the Ducs in St. Augustine, Fla., describes the town and the orange crops.

Here are several interesting 1906 ff. letters from "Julian," a nephew of the Ducs, from the U.S. Naval Academy and later from the U.S.S. Charles-

DUC-4-

Near the beginning of the collection and having no apparent connection with it is a letter from Robert Wilson Gibbes concerned with the exorbitant prices which Saunders, an artist, charged for his miniatures. Also seemingly unrelated to the set is a MS. in the undated material entitled "Literature in Charleston." Although unsigned it apparently was written by a local Charlestonian.

With the exception of the prices of tin which it furnishes, this set is more interesting than valuable.

24 items added, 3-4-56: Miscellaneous letters of members of the Duc family and friends.

litem added, 12-26-58: Deed to a slave named Anthony, who was sold to Henry A. Duc at Charleston on Aug. 16, 1853, for $700.

5 items, added 7-31-63, consist of personal letters only.

53 items and 1 vol. added, 7-21-66. The volume is the Ledger, 1843-1856, from the shop of H. A. Duc, tinsmith. The spine bears the initials "N. D." that cause doubt about H. A.

Duc, H. A.

Duc's ownership. However, the collection includes receipts made out to him that can be traced into the ledger's accounts.

The items are primarily bills and receipts from the business. They are useful because Duc frequently did not itemize in the ledger the goods and services that he sold to customers. Further, the absence of posting entries suggests that he did not use a daybook that would have itemized goods.

Edward Bishop Dudley (1789-1855) was governor and U. S. representative from N. C.

A copy of a land grant from Dudley to Neill Munn of Montgomery Co. is dated Apr. 27, 1838. William Hill, Secretary of State for N. C., certified that this was a true copy and sent it to Tristram Bostick of Richmond Co., N. C. (Apr. 9, 1848).

In Nov., 1838, Dudley wrote the Rev. Dr.

William McPheeters to identify another clergyman whom Dr. McPheeters had met.

On May 17, 1838, Dudley wrote Joshua A. Pool, Sheriff of Pasquotank Co., to grant a stay of execution on the grounds of insanity to another J. A. Pool. He instructed Sheriff Pool on the official procedure to be followed in applying for such reprieves.

Dudley, John W. Papers, 1816 (1852-1861) 1867. Cincinnati, Hamilton Co., Ohio. 22 items. Sketch.

This collection consists mostly of personal and family letters of John W. Dudley. Dudley and some of his family moved from Virginia to Cincinnati, Ohio, while other relatives remained around Lynchburg, Va.

A letter of Feb. 16, 1858 speaks of the "inauguration" [inveiling] of the statue of Geo. Washington and the speech of Edward Everett, both to be in Richmond.

A letter written in Cincinnati on Nov. 5.

1859, not long after John Brown's raid on Harper's Ferry, mentions a Mr. Payne, who may be Daniel Alexander Payne, Bishop of the African Methodist Episcopal Church and president of Wilberforce University. The letter mentions Negroes, slavery, "the Locos democrats," and the desire of two Negroes in Ohio to return to slavery.

A letter of Oct. 6, 1860 from Lynchburg says, "Politics running high. . . Judson Crane;", spoke to-night for the Whigs. . . "

A tobacco manufacturer writes from Lynchburg that, his business having turned out badly, he is forced out of business. He mentions a Mr. and Mrs. Charles Calhoun.

A letter of Dec. 25, 1860 from Lynchburg mentions a Robert Calhoun; and says, "Notwithstanding the gloomy times there have been a great many parties and some weddings. ..."

John W. Dudley writes from Cincinnati on

Mar. 21, 1860 to his brother, James, saying that he is being supported for Mayor of Cincinnati.

He mentions the Democratic Party; John Bell and Edward Everett, Constitutional Union Party candidates; and the tobacco business.

He writes from Cincinnati on Oct. 13, 1867, mentioning a Ned Calhoun; a Confederate veteran; his own Confederate sympathies during the late war; his present pennilessness; etc.

An undated letter mentions a Sally Cabell. This collection was originally a part of the Don Preston Peters Collection.

DUFFY, Charkes Letters. 1840-1888 Catherine Lake, Onslow county, N.C. 17 pieces

The collection contains the letters of Charles Duffy to S. J. Sedgwick, who conducted a West Point preparatory school in New York City. Lawrence, second son of Charles Duffy, entered this school in the fall of 1858 and remained there for a year. The father was anxious for his son to do well and consequently wished that Sedgwick would look after him very carefully. Lawrence lived at Sedgwick's house and once at least caused some trouble. The matter was evidently amicably settled, for on the return of Lawrence to Catherine Lake, his father wrote Sedgwick, expressing his appreciation for what he had done for the boy. There is no mention of wh whether Lawrence passed the examinations for entrance to West Point.

The collection is valuable in that it gives some idea as to the character and nature of a school that trained boys for West Point in 1859.

Duke, Maurice, Papers. Richmond, Va.

Maurice Duke, educator and journalist, was born in Richmond, Virginia, October 4, 1934. He was graduated in the Richmond schools, graduating from Cathedral High School in 1954. He served four year in the Navy as a motion picture photographer throughout Asia and the Arctic. In 1958 he entered Richmond Professional Institute and also joined Richmond Newspapers, Inc., as a photographer. A year later he transferred to the College of William and Mary, continuing his newspaper work as a photographer and reporter in the Williamsburg bureau of the Times-Dispatch. He received his A.B. degree in English in 1962 and returned to the Richmond office of the Times-Dispatch.

In 1963, Duke entered the University of Iowa. He received his Master's degree in 1965 and his Ph.D. in 1968. Both his M.A. thesis and his doctoral dissertation were on James Branch Cabell. While at the University of Iowa, Duke served as an assistant in the English Department. In 1966 he accepted a position as Assistant Professor of English at the Virginia Commonwealth University, Richmond, Va. He has spent his entire teaching career at VCU rising to the rank of full professor in 1977. In addition to his English faculty position, Duke is bibliographical consultant (the study of books as objects) to the director of the VCU libraries.

In 1969 Duke became a literary columnist and book page editor for the Richmond Times-Dispatch, a position he still holds along with his wife Dr.

Elizabeth Foster Duke who is a specialist in linguistics and also an assistant professor at VCU.

Among the papers written by Maurice Duke are several articles on James Branch Cabell and Sinclair Lewis. He has also been editor of Resources for American Literary Study since 1971.

The Duke papers consist of tear sheets of the literary or book page in the Richmond Times-Dispatch which he has edited since 1968. In 1977 his wife Elizabeth Anne (Føster) Duke joined him as co-editor of the page. The pages present reviews of books, announcements of forthcoming volumes, commentary on authors and their works, and other literary matters.

The correspondence reveals something about the social and economic conditions of the time. There is not much material of great value, but the correspondence of the four brothers living in various parts of the country is rather interesting and the business correspondence shows something of the economic situation in Tennessee, Arkansas, Texas, and Virginia.

Duke, Washington. Papers. Durham, Durham Co., N. C.

The papers of Washington Duke (1820-1905) have been assembled from the former Trinity College Papers and from those of his son, Benjamin Newton Duke.

The correspondence begins with two letters (copies) in 1863, when Mr. Duke was preparing to enter the Confederate Army. He settled his business affairs by sending Jim, a Negro hand he had hired, back to Kinston, N. C.

His return from the Civil War and his early struggle to establish his tobacco business on his farm are not recorded in his correspondence, which does not resume until 1890, when Washington Duke gave the money to bring Trinity College to Durham, N. C.

His early years, 1865 to 1880, as a tobacco manufacturer, left no manuscript records.

By 1890 Mr. Duke and his sons, Benjamin Newton and James Buchanan, were well established in business in Durham, New York, and elsewhere, so that his own correspondence and that of his sons reveals his interests, both financial and philanthropic. Letters come:

1. From relatives, seeking aid or sending thanks for gifts. Washington Duke helped his relatives with generosity.

 From Methodist Episcopal Church, South, members and ministers seeking aid for church buildings, furnishings, orphans, widows, and missionaries.

3. From schools and colleges asking for aid or in appreciation of help given. Louisburg College, Rutherford College, Trinity College, and Kittrell College were among those institutions writing about finances. The colored orphanage at Oxford was supported for a number of years. Many students sought help from Mr. Duke in the way of scholarships or loans. He was generous, both to white and black applicants for educational aid.

4. From business associates or would-be partners seeking financial aid and employment, or reporting business transactions and profits. This correspondence largely concerns textiles and tobacco. An example is the encouragement by Washington Duke of black capitalism in the founding of the Coleman Mills at Concord, N. C.

5. From people who were ill or unlucky, many of them very impoverished.

Of the original 285 items in the Washington Duke MSS., 274 were transferred, 12-5-70, to the J. B. Duke or the B. N. Duke collections, as this correspondence was addressed to the Duke brothers on the death of their father.

The remaining manuscripts in the collection have been added as pertinent to an understanding of Duke genealogy or to the career of Washington Duke.

1 item added, 9-18-51: a deed to land in Orange County, N. C., from Junius Class to Washington Duke.

1 item added, 6-6-53: a mortgage of 6-18-72 on Brodie L. Duke property owned by Washington of Washington Duke by the Board of Directors of the Fidelity Bank, July 28, 1905.

File under: Pictures. General.

7-22-66, one item added. This is the coat of arms of the Duke family.

l item added, 8-14-66: Printed resolutions of thanks and appreciation (Apr. 14, 1902) from the members of St. Joseph A. M. E. Church to Messrs. Washington, B. N., and J. B. Duke for their gifts totaling more than $6000 in the previous ten years.

2 items added, 2-27-68: Photostats of two records in the C. S. A. Archives in the National Archives Bldg. which concern the Civil War career of Washington Duke. One is dated Apr. 4, 1864, and is a report of Capt. George B. Baker, Assistant Quartermaster at Camp Holmes, Raleigh. This report is for CO.A. of the Camp Guard. The second item is a list of men who signed up for three years of service in the Confederate Navy. Washington Duke's signature appears on both of these documents.

Articles containing information about Mr.

Duke appear in the following newspapers: Durham Recorder (Apr. 16, 1900--copy in the Manuscript Department); Raleigh Morning Post (Dec. 27, 1903); and the Raleigh News and Observer (Apr. 5, 1896--copy on film in this library).

l item and 4 volumes, added 6-1-69, are a photograph and financial records of Washington

Duke.

The item, a picture of the kitchen on the old Taylor Duke farm where Washington Duke was born, was found in the attic of the Duke University Medical School. It was probably made in 1930 at the time the old farm was "rediscovered" and described in an article in the Duke Alumni Register (July, 1930, p. 229).

Four volumes concern the financial affairs of Washington Duke and the company of W. Duke and Sons.

The first and oldest volume is a ledger, 1873-1877, kept at the time W. Duke and Sons moved their factory from the farm to Durham. Even at this early day they were shipping tobacco from Maine to California. One instance is the surprising number of places in frontier Montana buying Duke tobacco.

The journal, ledger, and cashbook of Washington Duke date from 1893 until 1905, the time of his death. They appear to have been the work of his private secretary, James E. Stagg. All three are parallel in content and supplement one another.

The journal, 1893-1905, indicates gifts to family, relatives, and individuals, as well as transactions with institutions such as the White Rock Baptist Church, St. Joseph's A.M.E. Church, Louisburg College, and the Durham Conservatory of Music. Businesses noted are the American Tobacco Company, the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company, Cary Lumber Company, together with a number of cotton mills, railroads, and banks.

The cashbook lists in more detail dividends from investments in a large number of concerns and donations to many people and institutions over a period of a decade or more. Washington

Duke was consistently generous to his immediate family and his many nieces and nephews. His tithing to the church covered gifts to the Main Street Methodist Church, ministers, Negro churches, orphanages, and schools. With the coming of Trinity College to Durham, he made generous contributions to its finances, even including small gifts to the baseball team and to the library for book stacks. Trinity Park Improvement Fund and High School also were supported.

The fourth volume, added 6-1-69, is a ledger containing accounts which list mills, railroads, and other property, together with rents, personal expenses, tithes, repairs, etc. Here many local names of Durham citizens appear.

The four volumes are a sort of summary of the personal finances of Washington Duke in the last years of his life.

60 items were added 6-18-69. Of these six are copies of letters from the J. B. Duke MSS. On May 18, 1896, Feb. 25, 1902, and Aug. 22, 1902, Washington Duke wrote concerning what he remembered about his family history. A copy of a letter by B. N. Duke on March 25, 1927, lists the brothers and sisters of Washington and Artelia (Roney) Duke.

The earliest date in this addition, June 29, 1676, is that of a letter by Elizabeth (Duke) Bacon, Curles Neck, Charles City County, Virginia, written during the so-called Bacon's Rebellion to a sister to describe conditions in the colony threatened by marauding Indians. This letter, a Xerox copy from the William and Mary Quarterly, Vol. IX (July, 1900), No. 1, pp. 4-5, is in original form in the Egerton MSS. in the Public Record Office in London.

The dedication of the Duke Homestead as a National Historic Landmark on April 28, 1968, is recorded in letters, brochures, invitations to the ceremony, and addresses. Texts of addresses by Mrs. Mary Duke (Biddle) Trent Semans and Asa T. Spaulding are with the papers.

Among the genealogical items added 6-18-69, for the Duke family of Suffolk, England, are charts of the English lineage from 1190 until 1732.

Various copies of the legal records of the Dukes of Orange County, North Carolina, added 6-18-69, are copies from the J. B. Duke MSS. A genealogical table of the Dukes in America is also with this addition.

6 items and 1 volume added, 6-23-69, concern

W. Duke and Sons and Louisburg College.

The volume was transferred from W. Duke Sons and Company Papers, a collection of advertising materials for Duke tobacco. This small Durham Warehouse Account Book, 1876-1884, gives an interesting glimpse of the beginning of the great Duke tobacco organization.

W. Duke and Sons kept records of purchases of leaf tobacco from Edward James Parrish and Henry A. Reams, et al. In September and October, ca. 1883, are noted the travels of Richard H. Wright between Paris, London, and Antwerp. By January of 1884 he was in Melbourne and Sydney, Australia, advertising Duke products. Shortly before Sept. 10, 1878, George Washington Watts had entered the Duke firm, so that it is noted as W. Duke Sons and Company for the first time on that date.

A few shipping records in the early 1880's complete the volume.

The six items added 6-23-69, involve the finances of Louisburg Female College. Washington Duke on March 18, 1891, purchased the property of the school for $5000 and rented it to the college for an annual interest of 8%. President S. D. Bagley writes to Mr. Duke on March 28, 1893, on the state of finances and the need for repairs to buildings. On August 3, 1893, an inventory of the contents of the school structures was made.

These papers were the gift of Mrs. J.H. Semans.

l item, added 1-30-71, is a shingle taken from the roof of the first tobacco factory built by Washington Duke in 1865. This building was not in Durham as a plague attached indicates, but was constructed on the Duke homestead. The shingle is in the vault.*

1 item & 1 vol. added, 7-22-72: Copy of a broadside that was transferred from the Duke family Bible to the Broadside Collection in the Rare Book Room. The broadside carries a poem by W. W. Holden entitled "Marvin." It was written in memory of Bishop Enoch Mather Marvin of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who died on Nov. 26, 1877. The volume is the family Bible of Washington Duke that was published in 1861. It contains some birth, marriage, and death records of Mr. Duke and his family.

20 items added, 8-23-72: Prints and negatives of original photographs at the Duke Homestead. These photographs include pictures of the first, second, and third tobacco factories of Washington Duke, home of Washington Duke near Durham, N. C., Mrs. Benjamin N. Duke and her children, home of B. N. Duke, and of James B. Duke.

Other sources of genealogy of the Duke family are: Virginia (Gearhart) Gray Papers in this department; Zella Armstrong, Notable

Dula, A. J. Papers, 1908. Caldwell Co., N. C.

A. J. Dula was a private in Co. A of the 22nd Regiment of the N. C. Infantry Vols. The regiment was commanded by Gen. James Johnson Pettigrew. In his reminiscences Dula narrates the history of his company. In this typescript, "Civil War Incidents," Dula recalls his participation in the Peninsular Campaign of 1862, especially the Battle of Seven Pines; unhealthy conditions in camp; casualties; and the Seven Days Battle. Later in the late summer Dula's regiment participated in the capture of Harper's

Ferry, tarried too long to participate actively in the Battle of Antietam, and later took part in the Battle of Fredericksburg. Dula recalls in detail events of the following spring leading to the Battle of Chancellorsville, the battle itself, his injury at Gettysburg, the breakdown of the Confederate military administration at Gettysburg, and his recuperation until the following autumn when he rejoined his regiment. Dula tells of a visit of Gov. Vance to the winter quarters at Orange Ct. H., Va., and his impassioned speech. In the spring of 1864

Dula, A. J.

Dula fought with his regiment in the Richmond campaign until his capture on June 23. He was paroled in the spring of 1864. Dula ends his account with a complete list, compiled in 1865, of the men in Co. A. He notes injuries received, discharges, desertions, etc.

Duncan, Ennis, Jr. Diary, 1814-1815. Kentucky. 1 vol. Sketch.

This is a 65-page mimeographed copy of a diary entitled "The Journal of Ennis Duncan, Junior [,] Orderly Sergeant, 16th Regiment, Kentucky Militia Detached." The original copy is in the Ohio State Museum Library at Columbus. The preface, dated Dec. 5, 1956, is by Richard C. Knopf, Historical Editor and Research Historian.

Duncan was an orderly sergeant and sometime provost marshal in the 18th Regt. of Ky. Militia Detached throughout the unit's trek into Upper Canada in 1814-1815 during the War of 1812

Names mentioned include Col. Charles Gratiot, Jr. and Gen. Duncan McArthur (1772-1839).

Subjects discussed include camp life, food, horses, discipline, and courts-martial; the French and the Indians; reports of action elsewhere in the War of 1812; parole words, watch words, and countersigns; deaths and illnesses; cursing, desertion, gambling, grumbling, insubordination, mutiny, and stealing; sentinels; troop movements; the weather; and opium and whiskey.

After Lt. Col. Andrew Porter, the first commander of the 16th Regt. of Ky. Militia Detached was arrested, the Regiment was commanded by Maj. Stephen Thresher. Later Col. Gratiot, who appears to have been the only good officer the outfit had, assumed command and tried to bring order out of chaos.

A sketch rather than a real narrative, the diary is useful chiefly for its account of the Regiment's itinerary and for its unvarnished picture of the unit's personnel. The officers (except Gratiot) and troops, being ill-trained and ill-disciplined, were unfit for real fighting, and scarcely se even for the sporadic fighting which did occur.

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville. Papers,
London, England. Sketch.

This collection consists of correspondence and documents which relate to the career of Henry Dundas, First Viscount Melville (1742-1811), British politician and governmental official.

There are twenty letters (1793-1809) which involve miscellaneous political and administrative matters. Five letters are written by Dundas and four of them concern military appointments for Lord Granville Leveson-Gower, First Earl Granville. A letter (___, Feb. 5) from William

Dundas, Henry. First Viscount Melville. 2
Pitt (1759-1806) has objections to a plan of Dundas which relates to the slave trade.

A large proportion of the items in this collection are reports on the strength and disposition (proposed and actual) of British troops between 1794 and 1805. These documents generally refer to land forces, infantry and cavalry, and give extensive data on their size, location, and occasionally their expense in Great Britain, the colonies, and other military bases. An item of 1800 has a comparison of the military forces in 1800 with those of 1762. There are instruc-

A bound volume which is entitled "Melville Papers" (60 pp.) has a number of documents and a few letters for the period of 1793-1807. An item of 1793 (p. 15) refers to the deployment of troops under the command of Sir Charles Grey, First Earl Grey, on the Continent and in the West Indies. Six extensive documents (1793-1794)

Dundas, Henry. First Viscount Melville. 4 relate to the activity of French royalist armies in the Vendee, and they include reports on the extent of royalist control and proposals for the use of French troops. There is an abstract (p. 17) of a letter from the royalist commanders to Dundas on Aug. 18, 1793. Other documents are: a report (c. 1790) to Francis Godolphin Osborne, Fifth Duke of Leeds, Secretary of State of Foreign Affairs, on the diplomatic disposition of the Swiss cantons; two letters (Nov. 25, 1794, and Feb. 18, 1795) to Sir Evan Nepean, Secretary to the Admiralty (p. 29); a letter of Oct. 4, Dundas, Henry. First Viscount Melville. 5 1800, probably to William Wyndham Grenville, Baron Grenville, which comments from Denmark on Russian designs against Britain (p. 33); a memorandum of 1800 in which Dundas advises the capture of Teneriffe and the trade of South America (p. 39); a detailed proposal in 1804 for the seizure of Walcheren Island in the Netherlands (p. 41); a memorandum of 1807 in which Frederick Augustus, Duke of York and Albany, advises the use of conscription (p.43); and instructions for Sir Charles Stuart in the Mediterranean (p. 35). Some, if not most, of these documents are copies.

6 items added, 8-10-61. Six letters and documents which relate to the British expulsion of French citizens from Pondichery, India, in 1799. Two merchants of Pondichery, Louis Mercier and Jean Louis Carcenae, and other former residents make vigorous protests against this action which they attribute to Richard Colley Wellesley, Marquis Wellesley and Second Earl of Mornington, who was governor-general in India. The French were given only short notice of their deportation, and were then dispatched to England on the Triton. They protest that the English violated

These items include two protest from French merchants (Feb. 8, 9), the reply of Francis Dundas, Governor of the Cape of Good Hope (hephew of First Viscount Melville), to requests from the French when the Triton paused at the cape (June 30, and detailed letters of protest to Henry Dundas, First Viscount Melville, Home Secretary, by Mercier, Carcenae, and others among the former residents of Pondichery when they arrived 20 items added, 9-6-61. This addition has letters from George III to Henry Dundas when he was Home Secretary and Secretary for War. These (1793-1801) are usually short notes which contain remarks on various military and political subjects.

There are seven letters from 1793. On Feb. 3

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville the King requests that the Privy Council meet on the next day. He is glad that France will halt correspondence between the two countries, for this action will end Lord Auckland's desire to intrigue with Du Morier. William Eden, First Baron Auckland, was ambassador to the Netherlands, 1789-1793. On Oct. 23 the King notes recent French and Austrian battles. Some weeks later (Dec. 9) George acknowledges Dundas' report of seizures on Santo Domingo by the Jamaica expedition. Two days later he praises Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 10 the quick action taken against a seditious meeting in Edinburgh. On Dec. 19 he approves a promotion for Sir James Murray, Seventh Baronet. A week later (Dec. 27) the King applauds Dundas and the Lord Advocate for their attention to the factious meeting at Edinburgh.

Twelve letters are scattered from 1794 to 1801. On Jan. 11*the King agrees to allow Major Beresford to accompany Lord Hobart to India. Hobart was Governor of Madras, 1794-1798. George also notes that the trials at Edinburgh

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville are going well. On Jan. 28, 1794, the King approves of the discussion which had taken place in the Privy Council on the preceding day. He notes that the evidence of John Murray, Fourth Earl of Dunmore, has not raised his opinion of either the earl's capacity or principles. The King (Feb. 10, 1794), is glad to promote Ross to a colonel (probably Alexander Ross, later a general). On Feb. 8, 1795, George approves a memorandum on Dutch foreign settlements. He agrees with the decision to return the British

On Jan. 11, 1796, the King approves directions that Dundas has prepared for Sir Ralph Abercromby. George regards Santo Domingo as a primary military object and hopes Abercromby will have more latitude to decide on his movements. On July 16, 1799, he approves the augmentations of the corps of artillery that Lord Howe proposed (Sir William Howe, Fifth Viscount Howe). On June 17, 1800, George refuses to decide about a proposed reinforcement of troops for the Mediterranean until news arrives of French

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville. actions at Milan and Genoa. He hopes to give an answer by the next day. He writes that Belle Isle should be blockaded, but any attack must await more information so that it may be determined if the island is worth the risk and expense. Belle Isle is off the south coast of Brittany. The King then approves (June 20,1800) a cabinet memorandum which resulted from his objections to reinforcement in the Mediterranean He wants Dundas to get a measure passed by Parliament for the transfer of Dutch troops from the Isle of Wight. These troops must be Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville. used in any attack on the Batavian Republic. On Oct. 5, 1800, George consents reluctantly to send 15,000 men to Egypt which he regards as a potential burying ground like Santo Domingo. He is not surprised that Grenville and Wyndham dissented from this action. (William Wyndham Grenville, Foreign Secretary, and William Windham, Secretary for War). The King now hopes that everyone recognizes Napoleon's pusillanimity. He expects no good from Vienna. On Jan. 15, 1801, the King notes that the situation with the Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville. 15 Northern Powers deserves great exertion. On this subject George expresses determination and points out his dislike of the attempts of twenty years to avoid this issue.

litem transferred from the discontinued Buccleuch MSS., 11-6-61. Lord Buccleuch writes wittily to Dundas on Nov. 15, 1813, about keeping the bagpipers of the Scottish militia regiments from volunteering for the British army. This letter was published in the April, 1953, issue of Library Notes.

Another collection of Melville papers in the United States is located at the University of Michigan. The Michigan collection is described in William F. Welke, "The Papers of the Viscounts Melville," in The American Archivist, Vol. 26, No. 4 (October, 1963), pp. 449-462.

6 items added, 6-26-64. On Dec. 4, 1781, Dundas, chairman of the secret committee investigating the causes of the war in the Carnatic, summons Mathew Raper to attend its meeting.

Lord Cornwallis's letter of Dec. 15, 1795, may be addressed to Dundas as indicated by the Sotheby catalog. Cornwallis discusses at length his proposals for remedying defects in the addressee's plan for reorganizing the Indian Army, notably the disproportion in the prospects for promotion in the different branches of the service. He details recommendations for the artillery, engineers, and cavalry of the three Indian presidencies. Cornwallis is master general of the ordnance, and Dundas is secretary of war.

On Aug. 11, 1800, Cornwallis writes to Dundas from Dublin. He has seen correspondence between Dundas and Lord Wellesley, Governor General of India, and he is concerned about Wellesley's desire to leave India and his state of mind and the difficulty of finding a suitable successor. Cornwallis notes a report about the Nabob of Arcot and expects the discoveries about him will facilitate the East India Company's taking over the administration of the Carnatic.

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 19
He calls to the attention of Dundas and Pitt the need for Pitt to declare his intentions on the Catholic Question. He also notes General Lake's coming departure for India and discussion of an assignment in Ireland for the 4th regiment.

On Oct. 23, 1801, Melville notes the ill health of John Fordyce, a member of the House of Commons, and counsels him to continue his absence from the session. A routine letter of Nov. 21, 1807 [?] is possibly addressed to the same Fordyce.

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville

On March 14, 1812, Robert Dundas, Second Viscount Melville, who is president of the Board of Control, writes to Sir John McMahon, First Baronet, about a proposal that the East India Company be required to export a certain quantity of tin to China. Melville is favorable to this proposal of the Cornish miners and expects the Court of Directors to approve also.

l item added, 11-9-65. On Feb. 22, 1805, James Foulis wrote a long letter on behalf of Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 21 Catholic Emancipation in which he recorded some of his observations in Ireland and recommended his recently published pamphlet, Letter from Sheelagh to John Bull. He is apparently Sir James Foulis, Sixth Baronet, of Colinton who is recorded as the author of a Letter on Irish Affairs in Feb., 1805; see The English Catalogue of Books, 1801-1836, and Bibliotheca Britannica. 5 items added, 3-22-67. On June 16, 1806, Lord Huntly (late Duke of Gordon) congratulated Melville on his acquittal following impeachment proceedings.

20 items added, 2-19-68: Correspondence of Feb. 28, 1793, with Sir James Grant concerns a Col. Macleod.

On Feb. 21, 1794, William Fullarton, M.P. and army officer, proposed to raise a regiment that the Mackay clan offered to furnish. He enclosed a copy of his letter of Nov. 1, 1793, to Lord Amherst in which he had offered to raise and equip a cavalry regiment, presumably the 23rd Dragoons that he formed in 1794.

Communications with the French royalists concerned Philippe D'Auvergne, Prince de Bouillon, Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 23 on Sept. 11, 1794. He noted the royalists at Jersey Island and offered to ship arms into France.

Sir James Grant opposed the proposed arrangements for the fencible regiments (Oct. 13,1794).

The boroughs of Banff, Harwich, and Maldon wanted James Edward Urquhart to raise regiments (Oct. 23, 1794).

Lt. Col. Andrew Ross of the 21st Regiment wrote about his career (Dec. 18, 1794).

On March 9, 1795, William Fullarton wanted to know his military position before answering Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 24 questions about vacating his parliamentary seat Alexander Walker was recommended for an office in Ayr. A memorial addressed to the Duke of York on June 30, 1795, also concerns his claims to military rank and promotion.

Col. Simon Fraser (1765-1803) wanted to nominate his brother to a position in his regiment (April 21, 1798).

Frederick Augustus, Duke of York and Albany, was commander-in-chief of the army, 1798-1809. On June 9, 1800, he wrote about a corps of reinforcements for Sir Ralph Abercromby who was Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 25 destined for a campaign in Egypt. He would meet with Dundas, Pitt, and Pollard. On Sept. 29 he commented on Dundas' draft letter to the King about Egypt, and he was critical of Austria.

The Duke of Montrose, Lord Lieutenant of Stirlingshire, made a return on the corps of cavalry and infantry in the county (Jan. 5, 1801).

The Duke of York proposed adding to the strength of every battalion in Britain and Ireland and procuring men from the Irish militia (Jan. 27, 1801). He also speculated on how to Lord Macartney expounded on the need to retain control of the Cape of Good Hope and also of Ceylon (April 25, 1801).

General Richard Vyse detailed plans to raise a volunteer corps in Scotland and noted his correspondence with Lord Hobart (July 8, 1803).

332 items added, 6-30-71. These manuscripts of 1779-1811 are almost entirely incoming correspondence and reports. They are especially abundant during the 1790's. The defenses of Scotland and England, especially the former, are the most prominent subject, and many papers of 1779-1808 concern the militia, volunteers, and fencibles, and, to a lesser extent, the regular army. Both officers and private citizens interested in recruitment are involved. Military operations on the continent are represented, especially in communications of the allied

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville commanders in 1793-1794 and 1798 from the Netherlands and northern France. Secret Service Files, 1792-1795 (in separate folders), record expenditures and agents, particularly for foreign intelligence. Domestic political information, 1785-1800, is limited in quantity but not in quality, and mostly concerns Scotland. The Earl of Fife's letters of 1795-1796 are particularly noteworthy. Affairs of Ireland, 1793-1805, and India, 1780-1800, are mostly military and are not numerous. Commercial matters, 1784-1803, primarily concern Scotland

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 29 and are limited; external trade is also noted. There are a few items, 1795-1811, about the Excise Office and Court of Session in Scotland. Further information on these topics is provided below. The papers cataloged earlier also include some of the above topics.

One sheet marked "762 Military Affairs 1795-1805" is an indication of the source of at least a sizeable portion of these papers. It refers to Item 762 of Sotheby's sale of Feb. 23, 1927, in which Melville Papers belonging to Violet, Viscountess Melville, were sold.

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 30
Some of the manuscripts in Item 762 are identifiable among the papers in this collection -the report on the defenses of the coast of Dorset in 1798, the numerous papers on Scottish defense, and possibly others. Other items in the sale may well also be involved. The manuscript sheet and a copy of the entry for Item 762 in Sotheby's catalog are filed in a folder placed at the beginning of the collection.

Information about political affairs is scattered through the papers. A series of fifteen letters, 1795-1796, from James Duff, Second Earl Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville Fife, concerns parliamentary elections in Scotland, especially that won by William Grant in Banffshire, and Fife's relationships with various Scottish political figures. There is one letter each from William Grant and Major John Grant. A list of freeholders in Aberdeenshire in 1785 was made during the hotly contested election in which George Skene defeated James Ferguson. The compiler noted how each freeholder was expected to vote. On July 17, 1790, Andrew McDouall, M.P., mentioned the political situation in Wigtonshire. William

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 32
Hamilton reported on Greenock (Jan. 11, 1793).
William Garthshore discussed Lord Grenville (Aug., 1798). On Sept. 4, 1800, Grenville raised questions about French overtures for an armistice. John Macleod of Colbecks advised Dundas about maintaining his influence with Robert Macleod of Cadboll (Sept. 17, 27, 1800).

Operations of the Scottish Excise Office were reported by Sir James Grant, its cashier (Nov. 28, 1798). At his death his son, Francis William (later Lord Seafield), asked for the position (Feb. 21, 1811).

In 1804 the president and senators of the College of Justice presented objections to the House of Lords about proposed legislation regulating courts in Scotland, extending trial by jury, establishing an intermediate court of appeal, and altering the Court of Session. Fees and expenses of writers to the signet of the Court of Session were topics of Nov. 3, 1795, and 1807.

Commercial matters were an occasional topic. A memorial of March 1, 1784, was an appeal for bridges over the rivers Dee and Don in Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville Aberdeenshire. Petitioners from Banff wanted a customhouse to serve their port and the nearby coast (April, 1791), and trade in the area was discussed. On June 22, 1790, John Macleod reported that the possibility of war was encouraging the emigration of Scottish tenants and protested against allowing American ships to conduct such traffic. Sheep farming was also generating emigration to America (June 27, 1803). William Hamilton wrote about coal duties (Jan. 11, 1793). A plan for a defense force in 1793 includes a list of land-

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville holders in Roxburghshire whose rents exceeded £ 1000. David Scott noted the scarcity and expense of naval stores and urged the quiet purchase of captured ships held by France (Dec. 21, 1795; Jan. 11, 1796). A memorandum of July 11, 1800, was a proposal to reopen exchange with Amsterdam and included a discussion of the current state of trade with the continent, especially through Hamburg, and of the economic situation in France.

Dundas was involved with Irish affairs both as secretary of war and as home secretary, and Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville scattered manuscripts concern that country. Gregor Farquharson's letters of Jan. 17, 1793, to his friend Arthur O'Leary, Irish priest and politician, and of Feb. 4, 1793, to Dundas concern the lack of support among Catholics in Ireland for raising troops to fight the French (the letter of Feb. 4 includes O'Leary's views). Edward Smythe Stafford proposed to recruit men for the army and navy (April 19, 1795). Alexander Dixon's report of early 1797 (enclosed in his letter of March 17, 1802) on the defenses of Scotland included consideration of the Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 37 potential for sending reinforcements to Ireland. On May 24, 1798, John Blaquiere reported from Dublin on the rebellion. Troops for the island were included with those of other areas in the queries of Dundas that were answered by the commander-in-chief, the Duke of York (May 13, 1799). On April 10, 1805, Sir James Foulis discussed Catholics and Protestants in Ireland and his hopes for Catholic emancipation, and the results he expected from it.

Several items concerned India. George Macartney solicited appointment to the Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville governorship of Madras (Aug. 26, 1780). Correspondence with Sir Ilay Campbell and Lord Breadalbane (Oct. 22-23, Dec. 4, 17, 1787) was about appointing officers for Indian regiments, especially Sir Archibald Campbell's. Finedrawers at the East India House were noted on Nov. 29, 1790. William Hamilton referred to Dundas' motion on the East India Co. (Jan. 11, 1793). Charles Nicholas White was recommended for a seat on the council at Madras (Nov. 15, 1793). Col. Duff's plea to return to India and to be "placed upon the effective strength of Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville the army" raised a troublesome issue (Feb. 23, 1793). Troop strength was considered (May 13, 1799). There are a list of cadets appointed to the East India service upon the recommendation of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland (Dec. 24, 1800) and estimates of the cost of a brigade of Royal East India Vols. in peacetime (1800). Sir Francis Baring took note of David Scott and trouble within the management of the East India Co. (March 28, 1800). Scott wrote about the military establishment and the officer corps (undated letter).

The Home Office was responsible for domestic Secret Service operations and also for gathering intelligence about foreign naval operations until 1794. Separate folders for Secret Service Files include Foreign Secret Service Accounts, 1792-1795, in which names of persons are given with the amounts paid to them. French émigrés appear in these accounts. The Charles Stuart File, 1792-1795, was for domestic intelligence and includes three of his letters and numerous receipts and orders to pay. It also includes his proposal for a mounted police force.

Military operations on the continent were topics of a number of manuscripts. The Duke of York concerted strategy with Prince Hohenlohe and the Prince of Coburg (Dec. 22, 1793). An anonymous paper of March 15, 1794, concerned the use of troops held at Cowes, strategy on the continent, and the royalists in France. During July to November, 1794, and Jan. 7, 1795, there are communications among the allied commanders in the Netherlands and France such as: the Duke of York; William V, Prince of Orange; William Frederick, Prince of Orange-Nassau;

Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville Archduke Karl of Austria; the Prince of Coburg; General Clerfaye; and others. A manuscript of 1794 is a translation of a Dutchman's opinion of how to remedy the disastrous campaign of that year in the Netherlands. The statement was prompted by the contents of a letter from Dundas to the Duke of York. An examination of mixed naval and military expeditions with a proposal to assault Walcheren Island is dated Jan. 6, 1798. The circumstances of the decision to send Lord Nelson to Egypt were noted (1798?). In Aug., 1799, British troops captured the Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville Helder, and the Dutch fleet defied its commanders and went over to the English and the Prince of Orange. Correspondence and reports on these operations date during August to October. Rev. John F. Usko, author and traveler, reported from Smyrna on the situation in Turkey and the French army in Egypt (Apr. 16, 1800). The petition (Apr. 12, 1804) of General Sir David Dundas in behalf of the troops who occupied Toulon in 1793 includes accounts of the operations there. Intelligence on the Dutch fleet is dated July 27, 1804. On May 3, 1807, naval officer Edward

C.R. Owen outlined his plan for attacking enemy ships at the mouth of the Scheldt. Revolution and the French occupation of the Netherlands is also represented in the lengthy letters and memoranda of the Rev. Dr. Thomas Peirson, minister of the established English church in Amsterdam, who lost property and position. A broadside of May 17, 1795, from Haarlem is apparently revolutionary in character.

The greater part of the manuscripts concerned the militia and volunteers in England and Scotland, particularly the latter, and, to a Dundas, Henry, First Viscount Melville 45 lesser extent, the regular army. Included among these papers are the items noted below.

Dundas, Robert Saunders, Second Viscount Melville. Papers, London, Eng.

Lord Melville (1771-1851), British statesman, entered Parliament in 1794. He became a privy councillor in 1807, president of the Board of Control, 1807 and 1809, Irish secretary, 1809, and was first lord of the Admiralty, 1812-1827.

His correspondence, 1812-1826, concerns his duties at the Admiralty, and most of it is to and from Sir Thomas Byam Martin, comptroller of the Navy, 1816-1831. Letters prior to 1816 relate to Martin's duties on the Spanish and Dutch coasts in the war with France. A large amount of material concerns the annual naval budgets and construction and maintenance of the fleet. Correspondence of 1824-1825 with Sir Harry Neale concerns troubled relations with Algiers. Lesser topics are Canadian border defences, the Cape of Good Hope, the dockyards, negotiations for the purchase of timber in Austria, and relations with Brazil and Portugal.

During 1812-1813 Martin served on the coast of Spain. On October 2, 1812, Lord Melville promised reinforcement for his squadron. A year later Martin reported news from Spain and made preparations to take the news about the negotiations at Prague to Wellington (letters of Aug. 9- Sept. 6, 1813). On Sept. 2 Melville replied to criticism that the navy had not given sufficient support to the army on the Spanish coast and at the siege of St. Sebastian, and he ordered Martin to concert plans with Wellington for the winter season.

On Dec. 16, 1813, Sir William Young, commander of the North Sea fleet, discussed naval operations on the Dutch coast. In the spring of 1815 Melville asked Martin to assist the British forces near the Scheldt, but he declined because of ill health (letters of March 28-April 5).

In 1816 Martin became comptroller of the navy, a post he held until 1831. On May 18 he reported to Melville that a reduction had been made in the labor force in order to compensate for expenses in excess of the budget. His letter and report of Oct. 6 detail naval expenditures through February, 1817. An undated document with a watermark of 1816 is Martin's recommendation for simplifying naval construction by standardizing ship styles in each class of vessels. Sir Robert Seppings, surveyor of the navy, approved the plan, but Melville did not.

On Aug. 28, 1817, Martin sent Melville a series of letters he had received from Sir Robert Hall Capt. R. N., in Canada. Hall reviewed British naval and military strength along the U. S .- Canadian border and gave details about American vessels and forts along the border, among them Sacket Harbor (Madison Barracks), N. Y., Presque Isle (Ft. Erie), Pa., and Ft. Gratiot, Michigan. Also enclosed *British naval commissioner in Canada.

was a document entitled, "Proposed Commissariat Establishment in the line of Transport between York and Nottasaqua [Ont.], forwarded to Lord Bathurst in the Report of the Committee of Transport." An unsigned letter of about July 14, 1816 (possibly a companion to the above documents) was a report on the U. S. warships under construction at New York City. The writer also remarked that one of the merchant ships there had a round stern and that the U. S.

would probably be the first country to adopt them and naval architect Seppings's principle throughout.

In 1817 Governor Sir Robert Brownrigg of Ceylon and Peter Puget, commissioner of the navy there, disagreed about the size of the dockyard establishment at Trincomalee (letters of Aug. 14 and Sept. 9). Martin also commented about tighter controls over contract work at the dockyards (Aug. 14) and the plan for the works at Bermuda (Sept. 9).

On Jan. 3, 1818, Martin forwarded copies of letters, 1816-1817, from Sir Jahleel Brenton, dockyard commissioner at the Cape of Good Hope. Brenton discussed in detail emigration from Britain to the Cape, hemp production, Lake Knysna's suitability as a port and a settlement, timber for shipbuilding, and agriculture. Secretary of the Admiralty Sir John Barrow's unfavorable opinion of Brenton's ideas is dated Dec., 1817.

On Jan. 27, 1818, Martin reported (16pp.) upon the state of the navy's ships and their repair and construction, and he made recommendations for the future maintenance of the fleet. His statistics include comparisons with other fleets since 1763. Later (Aug. 2) he insisted that the present rate of work at the dockyards should not be diminished and supported his position with reports from Robert Seppings on the frigates and ships of the line. At this time charges by Benjamin Tucker, a former secretary of the Admiralty, caused an inspection of the seaworthiness of the St. Vincent and other warships (letters of Aug. 6, 18, 21). Robert Seppings was involved in the investigation. Martin hoped to reduce the expense and delay of repairing ships (Aug. 6). On June 30, 1818, Melville commented on Lord Liverpool's suggestions for the Naval Estimates of 1819.

A series of letters, 1817-1819, chronicle British negotiations to purchase timber in Austria. The major deals were with Messrs. Adamick and Haire and with the Austrian government. George Smith, assistant secretary to the Navy Board, handled the negotiations that were held in Austria. The relationship of the deal with the Austrians to their debt to Britain was also discussed. See letters of Aug. 14, Sept. 15, Oct. 29, Nov. 6, 1817;

March 3, 26, May 4, 1818, and April 10, 1819.

In 1819 Lords Exmouth and De Dunstanville asked the Navy to give supplies to relieve distress on the Scilly Isles, and Martin reported on the matter on May 6, 11, and 17.

In 1820 Melville wanted to examine the rate of shipbuilding and repairing so that he could report to Lord Liverpool.

On Sept. 14, 1821, Martin discussed the merits of teak for shipbuilding and of coal tar as a preservative. Later (Oct. 21) he wrote about admission procedure at the School of Naval Architecture, reductions at Deptford and Woolwich dockyards, and the death of John Rennie, prominent civil engineer.

On July 6, 1822, Martin examined the comparative expense of building cutters for the Customs Service in either public or private dockyards.

In 1823 and 1825 the Navy purchased steam engines for a number of small warships (letters of Feb. 22, March 3, Nov. 26, 28, 1823, and Feb. 19, March 2, 8, 10, 1825).

Martin's letter of Dec. 3, 1823, concerns the pension system for dockyard employees.

On March 25, 1824, Martin evaluated Thomas Morton's invention, the Patent Slip for docking vessels.

Martin's report (14 pp.) on the Naval Estimates for 1825 includes figures on dockyard

There is a series of letters between Lord Melville and Vice Admiral Sir Harry Burrard Neale while he was commander-in-chief in the Mediterranean, 1823-1826. In November, 1823, Neale was at Lisbon and reported on relations with Portugal, difficulties with the French envoy, and Portugal's conflict with Tunis. He noted Sir Edward Thornton, British envoy at Lisbon. British relations with Tunis were noted on March 10, 1824.

In 1824 there was a crisis in British relations with the Dey of Algiers, and Neale's squadron forced him to observe the Treaty of 1816. A series of letters from March 10, 1824, to February 19, 1825, recorded the Algerian situation. There was considerable criticism of the British consul at Algiers, Mr. H. McDonnell. Later William Shaler, the American consul, criticized Neale in his book, Sketches of Algiers. . . (Boston, 1826), and Neale discussed the matter on December 18, 1826. Shaler was a friend of McDonnell.

Miscellaneous topics of the Neale correspondence were: Capt. Hamilton's work at Tunis and Sir Graham Moore (Feb. 4, 1824); the appointment of Leonard Charles Rooke as a naval commander (Dec. 24, 1824); Capt. Abbot's court-martial and the loss of the Columbine (March 26, May 4, 1824); and losses incurred by the Sybille when attacking pirates (July 31, 1826). There are a few references to the Greek situation during 1823-1826.

In 1825 the shipwrights went on strike at the dockyards, and Martin wrote (Oct. 25) about Melville's response to the situation. He enclosed a letter in which Mr. Hutton, secretary to the shipbuilders, reported on the end of the strike and the agitation of the Union Committee. On Feb. 17, 1826, Martin reported unfavorably on the new 28-gun ships like the Atholl.

A week later (Feb. 24) he compared the timber on Lord Fife's land at Braemar unfavorably with that from Riga and Memel.

In 1826, Martin and Melville agreed upon an increase in the breadth of beam for all new three-decked warships and for two new frigates so that their armament could be increased (letters of March 16, May 31, July 21). On May 31 Martin sent Seppings's draft for a two-decker with a hundred guns, and Melville approved the construction of several of them (July 22). They also agreed to employ more shipwrights on the large vessels at the dock-yards. On October 10 Martin gave orders for the maintenance of those ships advanced in their fittings. On Dec. 16 he reported in detail on the ships to be advanced in their fittings for possible war duty, the frigates lately paid off and ready for service, and the troop ships in the effective force.

Letters of Martin and Sir Edward Banks (Dec. 22, 29, 1826) concern the purchase of two steamships, the Duke of York and the George IV. Martin also noted the number of steam vessels then under construction (Dec. 22).

A number of letters, 1817-1826, concern construction and expansion of the dockyard at Sheerness (letters of Aug. 9, 10, 11, 1817; May 4, 1818; July 12, 13, 1824; Dec. 21, 1825; and March 17, 1826. Other dockyards are discussed in letters of Aug. 14, Sept. 10, 14, 28, 1821, and July 20, 1826.

Five letters from Sir Herbert Taylor, 18141825, concern army and marine matters. On June 15, 1814, he was private secretary to Queen Charlotte for whom he expressed interest in a naval promotion for Charles Simeon. Later he was secretary to the Duke of York, the army's commander-in-chief. He wrote about: the military force to be sent to Scotland during the King's visit (July 15, 1822); a proposal to limit the number of Companions of the Bath (Aug. 17, 1823); an appointment for Major General Campbell, R. M. (July 8, 1825); and the sale of commissions by retired marine officers (July 8, 18, 1825).

A dozen letters, 1819-1829, are from Admiral Sir Robert Walker Otway, First Baronet. On July 12, 1819, he was the commander at Leith when he commended Capt. (later Admiral) Sir Frederick Lewis Maitland's service with him as commander of the Vengeur. On July 8 Melville gave orders for Maitland's next assignment. Letters of Oct. 29, 1821, and Jan. 2, 1822, and their enclosures concern Otway's claims for a K. C. B. On July 20, 1825, Melville offered him the East Indian command that was being strengthened. During 1826-1829 Otway was commander-in-chief in the South American station. His letters of 1828-1829 record aspects of the dispute with Brazil about seizures of English ships and Otway's relations with the Emperor. On Jan. 19 and March 25 he noted political disturbances in Argentina, and the letter of Jan. 19 includes comment upon and translations of letters written by Manuel Dorrego, Argentine political and military leader, during the hour before his execution. In early 1829 Otway was relieved of his command upon his request made on Nov. 25, 1828. Three letters concern his efforts to get his eldest son, George Graham Otway, admitted to the Naval College (Dec. 28, 1828, and Aug. 21, Nov. 13, 1829).

For further information on Martin, see the Letters and Papers of Admiral of the Fleet Sir Thomas Byam Martin, G. C. B. (London, 1898-1903), 3 vols.

10 items added, 4-3-67. Criticism of the Duke of Gordon's role regarding the Regency Bill appeared in a letter of Mar. 2, 1811, in which Richard Ryder, Home Secretary, relayed the Duke's recommendation of the Rev. Patrick Copland as a successor to Dr. G. Gordon of the Chapel Royal, Edinburgh.

Lord Galloway explained (Mar. 26, 1812) his application for the Kirk of Colvend (in opposition to Lord Buccleuch) and related it to the politics of Kirkcudbrightshire.

On July 1, 1812, a Dr. Nisbet of London remonstrated with Melville about defending the reputation of his father, the First Viscount Melville, and sent him a pamphlet on the subject

The Admiralty's decision to reduce the number of surveyors of the navy forced the retirement of Sir Henry Peake (Letter of Jan. 5, 1822). Melville commended his service and promised a pension equal to his full salary, and he also commented on the naval careers of two of Peake's sons.

on Sept. 3, 1835, Lord Aberdeen discussed the parliamentary status of the Scottish Church

Commission and Lord Melbourne's decision not to modify its composition.

On Jan. 2, 1842, Home Secretary Sir James Graham stated the government's position in the controversy with the Church of Scotland that preceded the schism of 1843 and the formation of the Free Church of Scotland.

l item added, 9-11-67. On March 15, 1828, George FitzClarence, later Earl of Munster, appealed for Melville's support of a plan to translate Oriental books. The publication of such works was the responsibility of a committee of the Royal Asiatic Society, and FitzClarence was on the committee.

l item added, ll-l-67. On Aug. 20, 1809, Sir William Burroughs, First Baronet, a prominent jurist of Bengal, discussed the possibility of Dundas becoming Governor General, the mutiny in the Madras Army, Lord Melville's assistance to Burroughs, and the appointment of Mr. Comberback as an attorney of the Supreme Court of Bengal upon the request of Sir William Duff-Gordon, Second Baronet, M.P. for Worcester.

1 item added, 4-16-68: The Earl of Clarendon Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, discussed at length on Nov. 7, 1849, the system of poor relief in Ireland and compared its operations with those in Scotland.

19 items added; 5-5-68: On July 4, 1816, George Rose, Treasurer of the Navy, sent detailed recommendations for the number and salaries of the personnel of the Navy Pay Office. One of the enclosures is a memorandum by John

Dundas, Robert Saunders, 2nd Viscount Melville W. Croker, Secretary to the Admiralty.

In 1815, Lord Exmouth commanded the British naval squadron in the Mediterranean Sea. A series of twelve letters from May to September were written from Naples Bay and Marseilles. He reported on the military, naval, and diplomatic operations in southern Italy, southern France, and elsewhere in the Mediterranean. The Admiral's letter of Oct. 9, 1814, concerned the status of petty officers. On Sept. 25, 1815 he cautioned against a severe reduction of the navy for the sake of economy.

Five business letters to Capt. John Dundore, discussing land and the settlement of estates in Va. Two letters of 1854 are from his grandson-in-law, John W. Palmer, who does not appear to be the author John Williamson Palmer (1825-1906).

l volume added, 1-13-64. This daybook, 1849-1858, is for the tannery of the firm of Dundore and Eddins, 1849-1852, and its successor, John Dundore, 1852-1858. Dundore and Eddins was owned by John Dundore and James Eddins.

Dundore, John.

The key to the identification of this volume is the entry of March 20, 1852, on page 218. It is stated that John Dundore took possession of the tanyard and the part of its stock that belonged to James Eddins, deceased. Notations on the inside front cover and on the last page refer to the firm, its owners, and their location at Port Republic.

The entries begin in July, 1849, and continue unbroken until late 1856. Many pages are missing from the back of the volume, but some entries remain for 1857 and 1858.

Dundore, John

Information on John Dundore appears in John W. Wayland, Virginia Valley Records (Harrison-burg, Va., 1930).

Further evidence for the identification of the owner of the daybook is in a ledger account for John Dundore that appears in the William S. Downs, Ledger I. Entries in the Dundore Daybook can be traced into the ledger account; such entries are those for Sept. 29, Oct. 6, 1855 (pp. 275, 277) and Sept. 3, Nov. 11, 1856 (pp. 287, 289). Dunn, John D. Papers, 1801-1917.
Bentonville Township, Johnston Co., N.C.

Letters and papers of John D. Dunn (b.c. 1827) a clerk in a mercantile firm at Drake's Landing, Greene Co., Ala. Correspondence is largely from members of the related Dunn and Martin families of Wayne Co., N.C. Contains information on overseers; treatment of slaves; the gubernatorial election of 1860 and the reaction to secession in North Carolina; and steamboats on the Alabama and Black Warrior rivers in 1861.

9 items added 5-15-57. Mention is made in these letters of family affairs and friends, crops, prices of food, illness in the 20th Regt. of Ala. Vols., and the prison barracks at Elmira Prison Camp, N. Y.

14 items added 5-13-58. Letters, receipts, etc., all of little consequence.

l item added 7-20-61: Routine letter from Julius C. Martin discussing weather, crops, and family matters.

155 items & 3 vols. added, 4-25-66. This addition consists of family and business correspondence, accounts, receipts, and legal papers from Dunn's life in Alabama and North Carolina. An unusual Receipt Book, 1853-1858, is from a steamboat company or companies at Mobile and records the wages of boat crews

Numerous tax and other receipts and a voter registration certificate (Oct. 24, 1902) identify Dunn's residence as Bentonsville Township, Johnston County, N.C., and the certificate gave his age as 75. He had returned to North Carolina from Alabama during the Civil War, for there is an affidavit of Feb. 24, 1863, that he was a miller in Johnston County. His oath of allegiance to the U.S. is dated Sept. 4, 1865.

On Oct. 12, 1859, John R. Casey, an overseer, discussed his occupation, as he had done in a letter of July 13, 1859, from Demopolis, Marengo County, Alabama. Dunn's letters and receipts of the early 1860's placed him in Greene Co., Alabama. N.B. Cox's letter of June 17, 1860, refers to Dunn's "keeping the warehouse on the Warrior River."

A small account book of A.B. Drake from the 1850's was later used by Dunn who lived for a time at Drake's Landing, apparently Greene Co. Two pages are notes about Dunn's war duty at Mobile and Hall's Mills in the spring of 1862.

A Receipt Book, 1853-1858, belonged to one or more steamboat companies or their agents operating steamers out of Mobile, Alabama, on the rivers running into the interior of the state.

Dunn, John D.

The volume is unusual and valuable, for most of the receipts are for the payment of wages to persons working on the steamboats. The workers included watchmen, pilots, carpenters, cabin boys, mates, engineers, clerks, captains, cooks, and slaves. Steamers listed include the Heroine Ambassador, Empress, Eliza Battle, Jeanette, Selma, and Duke.

The ownership of the volume is not entirely clear. John D. Dunn inscribed his name on a number of pages, and twice he used a date as early as 1863 (pp. 7, 31). Dunn worked in Alabama, according to his letters of the early 1860's, and he may well have been an employee of a steamboat company in Mobile. However, there are receipts for Dunn in North Carolina during the 1850's, and a check of the Mobile City Directories, 1853-1858, by personnel at the Mobile Public Library did not find Dunn listed as a resident of the city.

Advertisements for the steamboats appeared in The Mobile Daily Register that is on microfilm at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In the latter 1850's the steamers were advertised by Cox, Brainard and Company, a firm listed as steamboat owners (rather than merely agents) in Farrow and Dennett's Directory for the City of Mobile, 1859. However, the steamers were advertised by David and Ford or M. Waring and Co. as agents in the early 1850's, and neither firm was listed as a steamboat company in 1859. Apparently the receipts were kept for Cox, Brainard and Company's boats in the latter 1850's, but their ownership in the earlier years is unclear.

Some of the steamboats, notably the Heroine and Eliza Battle, are mentioned in Charles Grayson Summersell, Alabama History for Schools (Birmingham, 1957), pp. 188-196. The Eliza Battle was lost in one of the worst river accidents in the state.

Statistics on the steamers appear in William M. Lytle, comp., Merchant Steam Vessels of the United States, 1807-1868 (Mystic, Conn., 1952).

An unbound account book has scattered undated entries for persons at landings along the Alabama River.

One vol. added, 8-30-66. A Payroll Book, 1855-1859, contains the records for a large number of steamboats operating in Alabama. It includes the names of employees with their occupations and wages. Slaves are also listed. John D. Dunn inscribed his name, the date of June 27, 1862, and the names of Mobile and Greensboro, Alabama, on the cover, but there

Dunovant, R. G. M. Papers, 1861. Charleston, S. C. 145 items Sketch

Official papers of Brigadier General Richard G. M. Dunovant (C. S. A) relating to the defense of Charleston Harbor, S. C., and to the preparation made by Confederate Army forces in anticipation of the attack on Fort Sumter (Apr. 12, 1861). General Dunovant was in command of the defenses of Charleston Harbor, which included Forts Moultrie, Johnson, Palmetto and Castle Pinckney, as well as the floating battery of Capt. John R. Hamilton and mortar batteries on Morris Island, Sullivan's Island, James Island, and at Mt. Pleasant and Maffet's Channel. The papers date from Jan. 2 to Apr. 30, 1861.

The majority of the papers concern the fortification, provisioning, and garrisoning of the several forts and batteries. Included are numerous construction reports of Major Walter Gwynn, Bureau of Engineers; requisitions and reports from the various forts and batteries concerning ordnance supplies; lists of officers and men, and requests for permission to complete the complement of various companies by recruiting in Charleston. In this last category are: the muster roll of Co. D, 1st S. C. Regt. Artillery, stationed at Fort Moultrie; muster roll of Co. E, 1st S. C. Regt. Inf., stationed on Sullivan's Island; list of officers of the companies composing the 1st S. C. Regt. Inf., and their assigned posts; list of officers of the regiments in Charleston S. C., including those of the 16th and 17th S. C. Regts, Inf. There are copies of general and coming

Jones of the Adjutant and Inspector General's Office, and relate generally to the fortification, provisioning, and garrisoning of the troops in Charleston Harbor. In addition, orders dated April 6 and 11, 1861, stipulate the manner in which Ft. Sumter should be bombarded. An interesting resolution by the Executive Council of the State of South Carolina, dated Feb. 19, 1861 orders that General Dunovant report ".... the quantity of powder, shells, shot, fuses and munitions of every kind that are received at each post for an attack on Fort Sumter..." other general orders relate to discipline, furloughs (Mar. 19) changes in military personnel at the posts and general army regulations. The orders after Apr. 12 concern largely the reassignment of troops and the dismantling of mortar batteries (Apr. 26). Among misc. items, a medical report of Apr. 7 records the outbreak of an epidemic of measles on Sullivan's Island and at Ft. Moultrie.

Correspondents include: George T. Andrews Ellison Capers, Richard G. M. Dunovant, States Rights Gist, Maxcy Gregg, Walter Gwynn, David Flavel Jamison, David R. Jones, Stephen Dill

Lee, J. Mitchel, James. Johnston Pittigrew, Francis Wilkinson Pickens, Rosewell S. Ripley, and J.J. Pope, Jr. It is of note that a requisition for Ordnance and Ordnance Stores for the 10 in. Eliza Ann Dupuy (1814-1881), daughter of a merchant and ship-owner, was born at Petersburg, V. Her early childhood was spent in Norfolk, but while in her teens she removed with her father to Kentucky. Heavy financial losses made it necessary for her to contribute to the family income, and for this reason she turned to writing. Her early education had been extremely sketchy and she deliberately set about to educate herself in order to take up teaching. On the death of her father she accepted the post of governess with the family of Thomas G. Her entire life was spent in the South, where she taught and wrote voluminously-novels, articles, and short stor-ies. Ardent in her sympathies she was yet able to place her writings in Northern journals even during the Civil War. Her novels are extremely melodramatic, the sensational critics of her own day varied widely in their

Her historical novels, The Conspirator, The Huguenot Exiles, and All for Love are considered her best.

The collection contains the letters of Eliza Ann Dupuy to Robert Bonner, editor of the New York Ledger. From the correspondence one is able to gain considerable information about the DUPUY, Eliza Ann. Sketch. the lives and personalities of Eliza Ann Dupuy and Robert Bonner. She contracted to write at least two stories a year for the New York Ledger and the bulk of the correspondence deals with the sending of manuscripts, receiving payments, the author's hope for increased sale of her work inquiries as to the reason for the failure of certain stories to appear in the Ledger, and comments on Bonner's famous race horses, and on the trial of Henry Ward Beecher. The collection is valuable and interesting, as it sheds light on the problems of author and publisher and contains important biogra phical material on Eliza Ann Dupuy.
